

In the city of Woodstock, there was a man named Mark Brague, filled with the Holy Spirit and faith. Through him, Jesus was glorified, God healed the sick, spoke prophetically, restored families and awakened hearts.

This man heard the Spirit speak to his heart to begin writing the things he heard in the Spirit as he read the Word.

So he did as the Lord had spoken. As he began writing, he thought maybe he was writing his own thoughts but, the more he wrote the things that came to his mind, he realized that it was the whisper of the Spirit leading him and guiding him. The more he wrote, the more he felt the leading of the Spirit and he wrote with greater confidence. Many times, he would read the finished page with awe and wonder because he knew it had not been he who had written the words. Yes, his hand was the hand that typed words to page but it was the Spirit who had inspired the very words as they came. He felt the pleasure and joy of the Lord as he wrote and he kept these writings as a personal treasure.

However, the things he wrote began to be shared among his friends and family. They were shared in small groups and among friends. It was said by his friends about his writings, "The Spirit speaks to us as we read your writings"

His initial writings were assembled and bound in small book form and made available to all who desired to read them. Those who read his writings came in contact with the Spirit as they read the inspired words on the pages.

Souls were revived. Families were restored. Healing came to broken hearts as they read the words the Spirit had whispered.

He continued to write and the Spirit continued to whisper. Many books were bound and published as a result. His name grew as one who hears the Holy Spirit and his books began to be in great demand. He was given opportunities to bear witness to the goodness of God because of the writings. He was given the opportunity to have an audience with powerful unbelievers who were strangely moved by his writings although they did not know why. They praised him for his ability to touch a human heart through his writings. But he was faithful to God and always gave credit to the Whisper of the Spirit.

Amen

Mark Brague
